Pilot Killed In Plane Crash Near Torrance Line

Witnessed by many residents, a three-motored Northrop experimental plane lost a portion of its tail section over Torrance last Thursday and crashed near 233rd street and Avalon boulevard after the pilot tried unsuccessfully to bail out.

The pilot, L. A. Perrett, 42, had ordered his two crew members to bail out while he attempted to guide the plane to a safe landing, sheriff's reports showed. However, when a crash was inevitable he himself attempted to bail out, but his chute, though open, failed to check his fall before he hit the ground.

The co-pilot, John Atkinson, 28, of Beverly Hills and engineer, E. P. Hetzel, of Los Angeles, were unhurt.

The pilotless plane crashed into a 200-foot lightning arrester tower, barely missing a million barrel oil reservoir.

The circumstances of the crash parallel a similar crack-up of nearly two years ago when an Army bomber lost a portion of its tail section over Torrance and crashed into the General Petroleum Corporation's tank farm on Main street, only two blocks from the scene of last week's tragedy. However, all member of the Army ship parachuted to safety.

Nearly 1000 homes now are being completed in Torrance, and 3600 others proposed.

The Board, in an effort to get the bonds voted so that early construction can be accomplished, has fixed May 12

An ordinance to be voted upon will eliminate the pay of $50 a month to members of the City Council, and another will allow the removal of members of the Police and Fire departments for cause.

Various legal notices involved in the calling of the elections are printed elsewhere in this edition of the Torrance Herald.
